The personal memorial volumes of the Great War of 1914-1918 were a phenomenon particular to the period and more especially to the temporary officers who fell in such large numbers during the war. There are also a number to regular army (and Royal Navy) officers, a few to “other ranks” and a couple of Americans serving with the British Forces during the war.

This bibliography, the result of many years of careful recording and study of the genre, contains bibliographical details and extensive notes on 370 volumes devoted to men (and several women) who fell in the war. It is a valuable guide to a primary source, the extent and range of which few have appreciated to date. It records in detail a cannon of writing — much of it surprisingly fine considering the youth of the writers — which provides us with a wide range of personal experiences and emotions which together portray the active service experience of the Western and other Fronts.

The letters and diaries reproduced in these volumes, together with the memorials of their lives written by those who knew them, and the letters of condolence written by comrades and friends, tell us much about these young men who fought in the First World War, their society and background and, in between the lines, the impact on British society. These accounts more than complement the various formal official and regimental histories. They help to fill in the essential experience of battle, and of course periods of tedium, that were the lot of the fighting soldier (or airman or matelot) of the Great War. A few are bald records; most are informative and frequently amusing and entertaining. Some are quite exceptional in the range of emotion and/or experience eloquently described. None can fail to move one.

There are extensive indexes of regiments, cemeteries and memorials, schools and colleges, battles and other events of the Great War. This will enable those with some special interest to quickly identify volumes of value to them.

Sewn clothbound edition with dustwrapper, x+390pp., 62 illustrations.
Price £75.00 including UK postage and packing. (additional £5.00 postage and packing for overseas orders)
Eagerly awaited by book collectors and scholars of the Great War, In Memoriam will be the definitive bibliography of a frequently overlooked body of personal experiences of the war. In Memoriam is produced to Tom Donovan Editions’ usual high standard, printed on fine coated paper and in a sewn cloth binding. Numbers are limited so to avoid disappointment reserve your copy now.

To Reserve Your Copy

Contact: Tom Donovan Editions, Flat 4, 22 Florence Road, Brighton BN1 6DJ. Tel. 01273-566230.
Email: tom@turnerdonovan.com Website: www.tomdonovaneditions.com